A number of features make this book a valuable resource:
• It provides an overview of the steps in writing for publication.
• It discusses the writing style required for a draft article (manuscript).
• It critically analyses questions such as ‘Where and how do I begin to write an article?’, ‘How do I write the abstract?’, ‘How do I actually write the article?’, ‘How do I prepare the manuscript for submission?’ and ‘How do I deal with feedback on the manuscript?’.
• It clarifies the role of critical readers and the feedback process.
• It examines the matter of open access and the issue of ethics in writing articles.
• It provides practical guidelines on how to revise a manuscript before submission to a journal for review.

Why do some academics manage to publish journal articles while others find it extremely hard to get published? First Steps in Journal Article Writing attempts to answer this important question. It is a much-needed introductory text for all academics, researchers, scholars and students in the social sciences interested in publishing their work.

The decision to produce this book was motivated by the increased pressure in academia to publish research findings in cutting-edge scholarly journals. This book brings together and melds various perspectives, techniques and traditions in scholarly writing in an accessible, hands-on text that can be used to prepare manuscripts for submission to these journals.
